"Human Nature"
Curses do not always land where they are sent.

One who never forgives an enemy often forgets a friend.

The sweetest songs are those heard when you were a child.

A woman never tires of being told that she is loved.

Concealment in love may be prudence and not deceit.

What we believe is truth to us else we would never believe it.

To look back on a happy youth is to live twice: then and now.

A man may be a hero as a lover, but seldom as a husband.

It is never good form for a man to pose as too innocent.

A man proposes, woman suspects, that is if she thinks she will.

The man that is perfectly contented with the world is too good for it.

Every century prides itself that it is better than all other centuries.

The pessimist admits himself a failure.

A performance today is cash in hand; a promise of tomorrow is only a note at hand.

Value's violation scars a conscience, resistance burns it, neglect consumes it.

The shortest road to happiness is to be content where you are and with what you have.

When people love you they cheer you; when they fear you, they let you cheat them.

The people that we come in contact with during our every day lives influence our thoughts to a greater extent than most people are willing to admit.

All centuries until the nineteenth belonged to man. The nineteenth century was woman's. The twentieth century is the children's century, as well as the thought century.

Enemies, Though Friends

A fierce battle was on at the front in northern France. In the German lines, about twenty yards distant from the nearest positions of the French, Lieut. Jung, a young German officer, cautiously raised his head to a vantage point above the embankment in order to watch the enemy's movements. No sooner had he raised his eyes to a point from where he could see than a voice from the opposite trench cried out: "Lieut. Jung, be careful!"

Amazed and startled, the German heeded the warning and jumped back into the trench. A short time later he raised up for another look and once more was warned by some one among the French. This time he recognized the voice. It was that of a young French business man who for some time had worked in the office of the factory belonging to Jung's father for the purpose of studying German methods of business. At the outbreak of the war he had hurried home to join the French army.

The Frenchman's warning had undoubtedly saved the German's life. Though they met on the field of battle as enemies, the quarrel between their respective countries had not served to lessen the friendly feeling existing mutually between them.

ITS LOCATION.

"Here's a scientist says he has found radium in ordinary dew."
"Yes, and already automatically stored up in grassy banks."

Grinding Grain for Horses.
Many farmers do not care to grind all the grain their teams eat, neither do they care to take the trouble to cut up all their forage and then to sprinkle it and mix ground stuff with it, but that practice will pay in the case of aged animals whose teeth are past repair.
